Editorial

St Patrick's Day again. Let's hope the Irish blessing "For every storm a rainbow" holds good for many of the world's people suffering in one way or another.

I would normally consider fund-raising publicity to be unsuitable material for the newsletter, but when several family history organisations get together, they are hard to ignore - particularly when the event is in aid of the Red Cross in Ukraine.

Check out the details of a 24-hour free online history fest on page 5. Participants include Fiona Brooker and Michelle Patient, both past presidents of NZSG.

Thanks to Noeline and Deborah for their contributions. It makes such a difference to be able to include original articles. See pages 3 and 4.

Apologies for the late delivery of this newsletter to those of you that noticed. March caught up on me. I hoped that everybody would be too busy chasing up discoveries made at Rootstech!

Did anyone make significant discoveries. If so, I'd love to hear about them.

The Irish Genealogical Conference with the link on page 4 leads you to the Legacy FamilyTree Webinar site where you can find other interesting articles.

So Rootstech is done and dusted, but you can still access the videos of talks for the next twelve months. There was so much covered you couldn't possibly follow everything of interest.

It's disappointing that this month's meetings had to be cancelled. Let's hope life gets back to a more normal routine in April. In the meantime good hunting.

Sheila

NB. Please note that also applies at the APFHC facilities in the Paraparaumu library whether researching on your own during opening hours or at the session open to the public on Wednesday mornings.

Deaths - but no body!

I was searching for a death certificate for Joseph Seymour as his death by drowning at Omaha (North of Auckland) on 15 April 1867 was reported in the Daily Southern Cross. There is no record in BDM NZ

Joseph's brother William Seymour was also drowned on 22 April 1867 at Mangawhai. His death is recorded in BDM NZ 1867/5.

Discussing this with a friend who is a retired Police Detective he tells me that unless a body was found and an inquest held, the death was not recorded. He sent me the following information. He is not sure when the law changed but thinks it was well into the 1900's

Family History – Death and burial resources | Christchurch City Libraries

Notes

- In colonial New Zealand, death certificates were issued only when there was a body. Accident and murder victims whose bodies were not found had no death certificates.
- Information on a death certificate is usually provided by relatives of the deceased.
- Sometimes information on one certificate will conflict with that on another.
 - A partner may reduce his or her age on a marriage certificate so that it is approximate to that of the spouse. The true age is usually given on a death certificate.
- A person whose spouse had been gone for seven years, could, as a widow or widower, re-marry. The seven-year rule still applies.
- Deaths at sea were registered in the home country. Immigrants who died on the way to New Zealand were recorded in the British Isles or continental Europe.
- In a death entry the slash means the entry is incomplete and not final. A death has been presumed, for example in a drowning, and no body has been recovered. The death may appear in a later year without the slash.
- In peacetime a death certificate is not issued for a New Zealand citizen who dies overseas. Since 1995 however, relatives have been able to pay a fee and have the death recorded in New Zealand by Births, Deaths and Marriages.
 - After 1 January 1988, a death can be searched for on Births, Deaths and Marriages using either a woman's maiden or married name. However the deceased's date of birth must have been at least 80 years ago.

Update on NZSG status

NZSG has initiated a review of the relationship, and accompanying rules, for Interest Groups and Branches.

Ambiguity currently exists in that although branches operate independently, changes may be needed to ensure clarity and that branch assets remain separate from NZSG.

We will be participating.

One outcome could still be that we have our own rules and Charity registration, both of which piggyback on those of NZSG as things stand.

For background information on all of this, please refer to the document sent to you on November 16th 2021 and loaded to our website under the Members Only content, NZSG page, <http://www.kapitigen.org/membership/members-only/nzsg/>)

Online Genealogical Index

Online Genealogical Index <https://ogindex.org>

Genealogical list of record sources by place England, Wales, Isle of Man e.g. BMD, Banns, Burials, School registers.

Trial

Search: Long Load Somerset gave 19 results

I chose the result "Somerset Banns Index" & searched 1808 +-2 Monckton

Leads to findmypast full transcription of John Monckton & Jemima Hutchings Mge year 1808.

I have a subscription so clicking on the blue link took me there.

If you don't have a sub for Ancestry or findmypast you could look it up on our library computers.

The 19 results for a very small village gave me many sources for research.

The site is easy to use. Try it out.

Free online Irish Genealogical conference

This link will lead you to a free online Irish conference in honour of St Patrick's Day, run by FamilyTree Webinars. One of the speakers is John Grenham. Check it out. Saturday March 26th.

Changes at Ancestry

Despite what the Ancestry collection "New Zealand, Electoral Rolls, 1853-1981" says about which rolls are indexed and which browse only, these have all now been indexed (thanks Michelle Patient for the alert).

Certainly a search for Henderson in electoral year 1866 brought up a good many results even though the source info when you scroll down says 1865-66 1866-67 are in the browsable, not indexed category.

If you want to know more about what Ancestry has changed, or is about to, Michelle has a few short videos on the TalkingFamilyHistory YouTube channel that will help you find your way around as things change.

<https://www.youtube.com/channel/UClqMy9HxIlu8vNvr-zsutPg/playlists>

IrelandXO Guide to Irish Monasteries

Ireland XO's Guide to the Monasteries covers the most visited monasteries in Ireland.

St Enda's Monastery (shown) was founded by St Enda in the 6th Century on the largest of the Aran Islands just off the Galway Coast.

All that remains are two churches, a holy well and the base of a round tower.

It belongs to the earliest phase of Monastic activity in Ireland.

Free 24-hour History Fest

This is from the regional representative for the Guild of One Name Studies, Michelle Patient, a former President of NZSG.

A free 24 hour History fest - online virtual 24 hour marathon (like our old telethons) to raise funds for the Red Cross, will be held on 27th March from 1am NZDT.

This event was instigated on Twitter by UK based Guild member Natalie Pithers. She now records updates about what the behind-the-scenes team of volunteers are up to and publishes them on YouTube. The HistoryForUkraine event will be streamed live from 1am on 27th March 2022.

48 historians around the world have volunteered to talk about history - including family historians from Australia and New Zealand. Fiona Brooker and I (Michelle) are fortunate to have been selected. The programme is yet to be published on the website, which is constantly being updated <https://historyforukraine.co/>. If you are interested you can follow the developments and news about this event on twitter Facebook Instagram or YouTube

Many other family history organisations are supporting this project - including The National Archives UK (TNA), The Federation of Family History Societies (FFHS), Society of Genealogists (SoG), Society of Australian Genealogists (SAG).

Machine Reading Maps

Just think of how much genealogical data is locked up in maps and not accessible without painstaking work, map by map, with all the eye straining that entails.

Have a read of

for a rather exciting application of technology to unlock this info by MRM - Machine Reading Maps.
